Introduction

Hi! I'm Rob Rosenberger, a retired military historian and the world's first full-time salaried critic of the global cybersecurity industry. You may be wondering "why on earth did you create this PDF?"

Ostensibly, I spent some time writing a program to build this PDF on demand. Realistically, though ... it forced me to write a far more powerful application I'll need for my post-retirement research project comparing Air Force 4-star generals' promotion timelines.

From my perspective: this PDF is nothing more than a testbed.

I expect Duffel Blog reporters will find this PDF useful for pitching stories to their editor. Parody sites rely on fresh ideas and a bit of research might reveal you're reinventing the wheel. I expect Duffel Blog's readers will also find uses for it. Duffel Blog's website has a pedestrian search function; this PDF offers better searching offline for headlines & subheads. Reporters can see their headlines in chronological order and fans can click on the links to read each story. Plus, there's a lot of useful stats in here for Duffel Blog's editors & reporters.

Okay! So, "yeah." That's the story behind this PDF. I view it as a testbed and I'll be happy if anyone finds it useful. My very best to y'all, and thank God for Duffel Blog!

— Rob Rosenberger (@rsnbrgr on Twitter)

PS: Anyone can do what you see here. I didn't use my Duffel Blog subscription to assemble this data.

Trivia: One of my programs took 19 minutes to build 131 charts, many of which are available via links if you're curious. Another program took only 35.2 seconds to write the word processing file. It took roughly four minutes to manually adjust it in ways my software can't yet do for me. It took roughly 10 seconds to export the file to PDF.

A note about swear words

Some headlines use the root words *f*ck*, sh!t, and p-ssy, perhaps to circumvent corp/gov/mil email & browser filters. This PDF shows a root word in its vulgar form so we can better search and analyze its occurrence in headlines.

A note about URLs

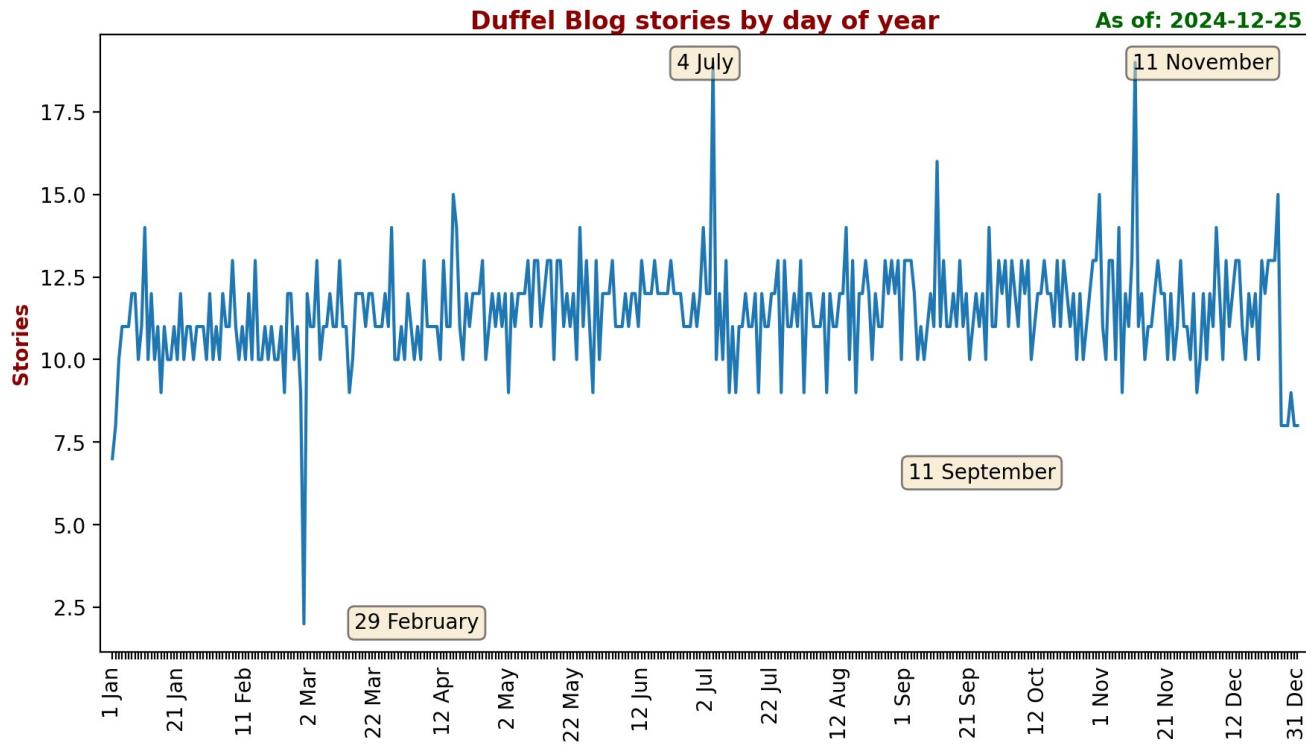

Duffel Blog changed many URLs in early 2024, apparently to comply with a character limit that seems to manifest in the underlying web platform. These URL changes ended by July 2024. Of course they might change again in the future, so... yeah. You've been warned.

Charts & graphs

They sometimes tell a better story than words alone...

Yearly publishing trends

Duffel Blog published at least once a day until November 2020 when they switched to four times per week. The "Weekly publishing trends" chart will explain why they switched. A July-June chart provides a better visualization of Duffel Blog's December-January holiday season.

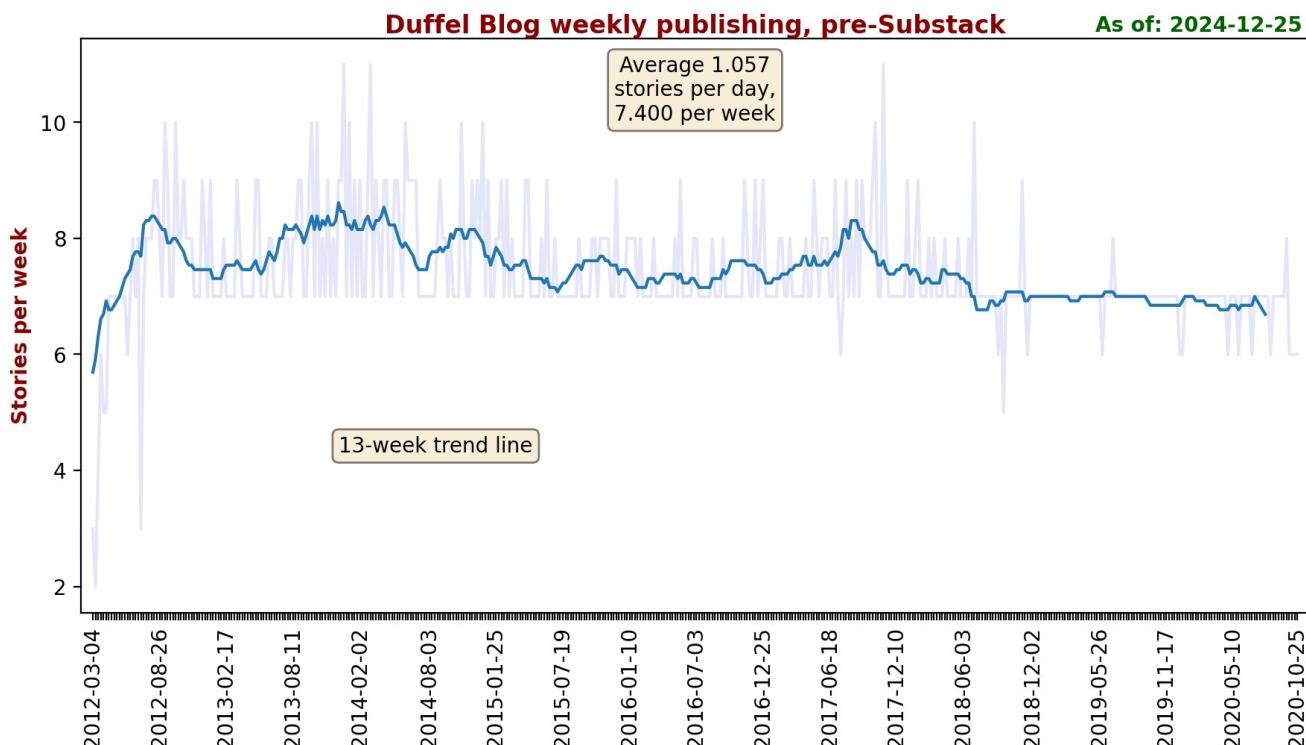

Weekly publishing trends

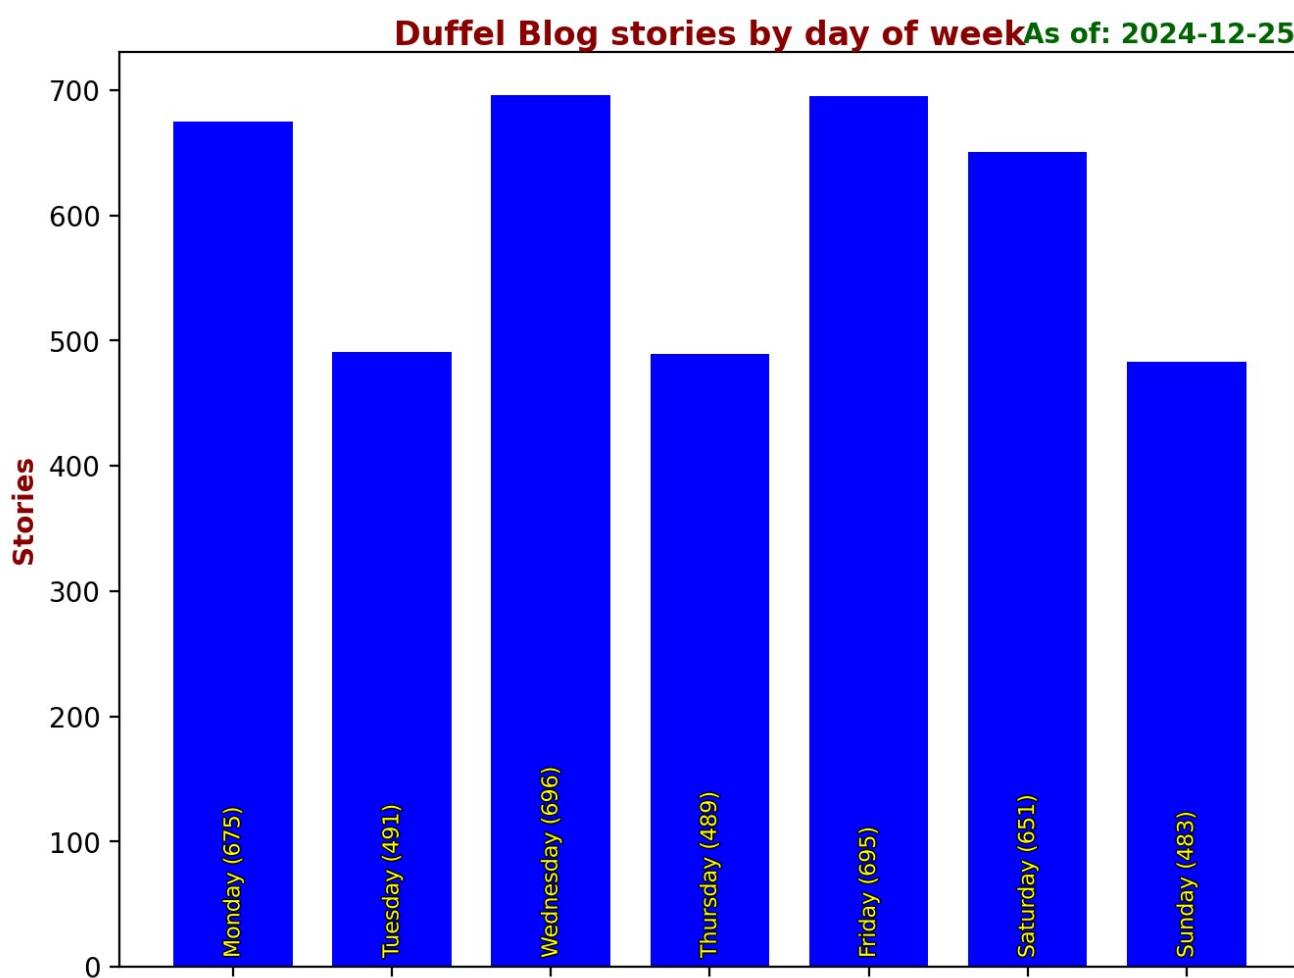

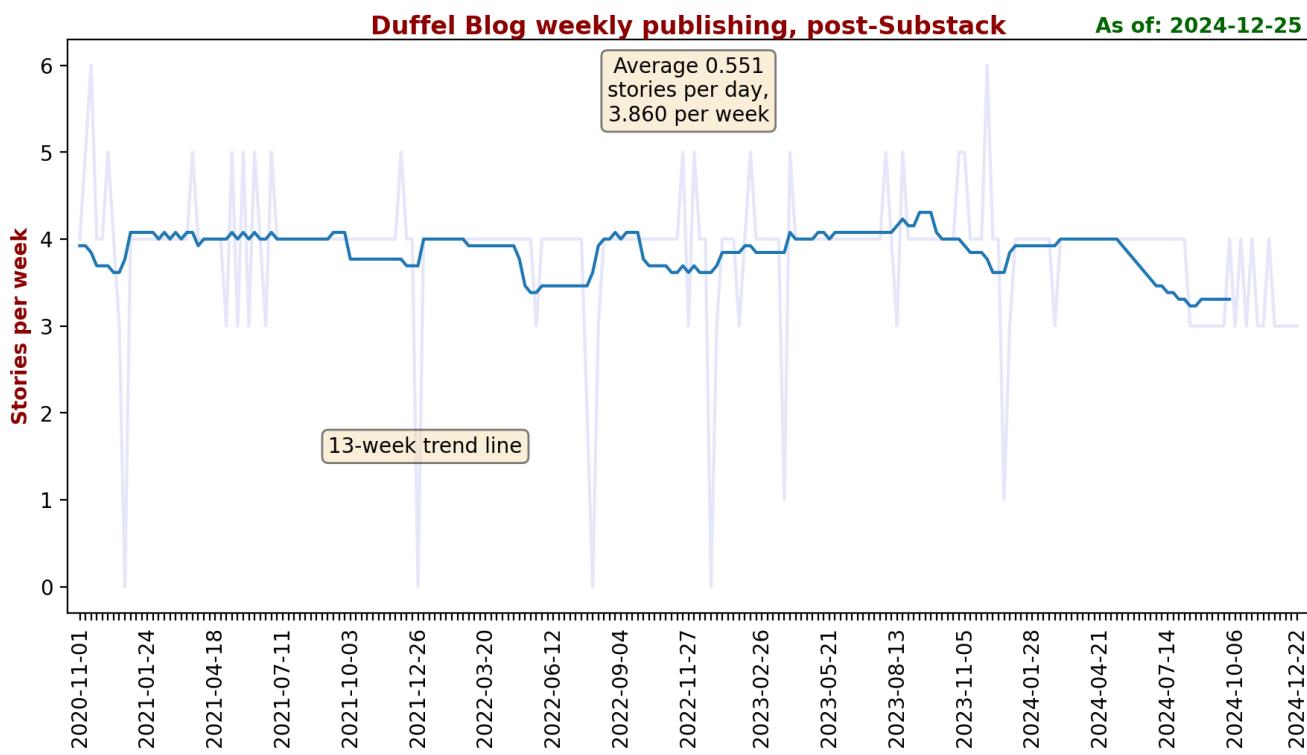

Duffel Blog's ad-based website averaged $7\frac{1}{2}$ stories per week from March 2012 until November 2020 when they transitioned to Substack. The first chart reveals they finally settled down as a mature daily publication in mid-2018. Switching to Substack led to a four-days-a-week schedule with a roughly annual weeklong vacation that hints at a reduction in editorial staff because...

Duffel Blog founder Paul Szoldra "broke the fourth wall" on 24 Nov 20 to explain they suffered the double whammy of global pandemic upheaval on top of Facebook's well-documented scam that targeted — and obliterated — nearly all successful English-language digital comedy outlets, e.g. Cracked and CollegeHumor. Watch this short YouTube clip to get a true sense of Facebook's vampiric decision to drain comedy's lifeblood.

On the third anniversary, Szoldra again broke the fourth wall to say the changes proved "a success: No longer constrained by social media algorithms, we see your comments and email replies on stories every day... And for those who are paid subscribers, we especially appreciate your support in keeping this humble dream alive another day."

The post-Substack chart reveals Duffel Blog dropped Saturday stories effective 24 Aug 24 in favor of a three-days-a-week schedule, with the occasional fourth story falling on a historically significant date.

Specific days

"Daily publishing" charts fail to provide a good visual representation of the data, but you can view pre-Substack and post-Substack charts if you're curious.

Publishing times on specific days yield only esoteric information and they tend to look identical:

- Weekday pre-Substack and post-Substack charts cover Monday through Friday
- Weekend pre-Substack and post-Substack charts cover Saturday and Sunday
- Monday pre-Substack and post-Substack charts
- Tuesday pre-Substack chart; too little data exists for a post-Substack chart
- Wednesday pre-Substack and post-Substack chart
- Thursday pre-Substack chart; too little data exists for a post-Substack chart
- Friday pre-Substack and post-Substack charts
- Saturday pre-Substack and post-Substack charts
- Sunday pre-Substack chart; too little data exists for a post-Substack chart

The Saturday post-Substack chart reveals wild fluctuations before August 2021 when Duffel Blog settled on 0800ET, give or take a few stories. But "August 2021" is what the data tells us with high confidence. If we ignore the chaos — and that's a big "if" — the limited remaining data suggests with low confidence they picked 0800ET for Saturdays in November 2020 when they made the switch to Substack.

Publishing time of day trends

Duffel Blog initially published stories at 0900Z, then transitioned to 0800Z. Eventually, the day's first story posted at 0700Z (except for a short stint in 2014) until Duffel Blog transitioned to Substack in November 2020. They made a switch to Eastern Time and tended to publish stories at 0800ET.

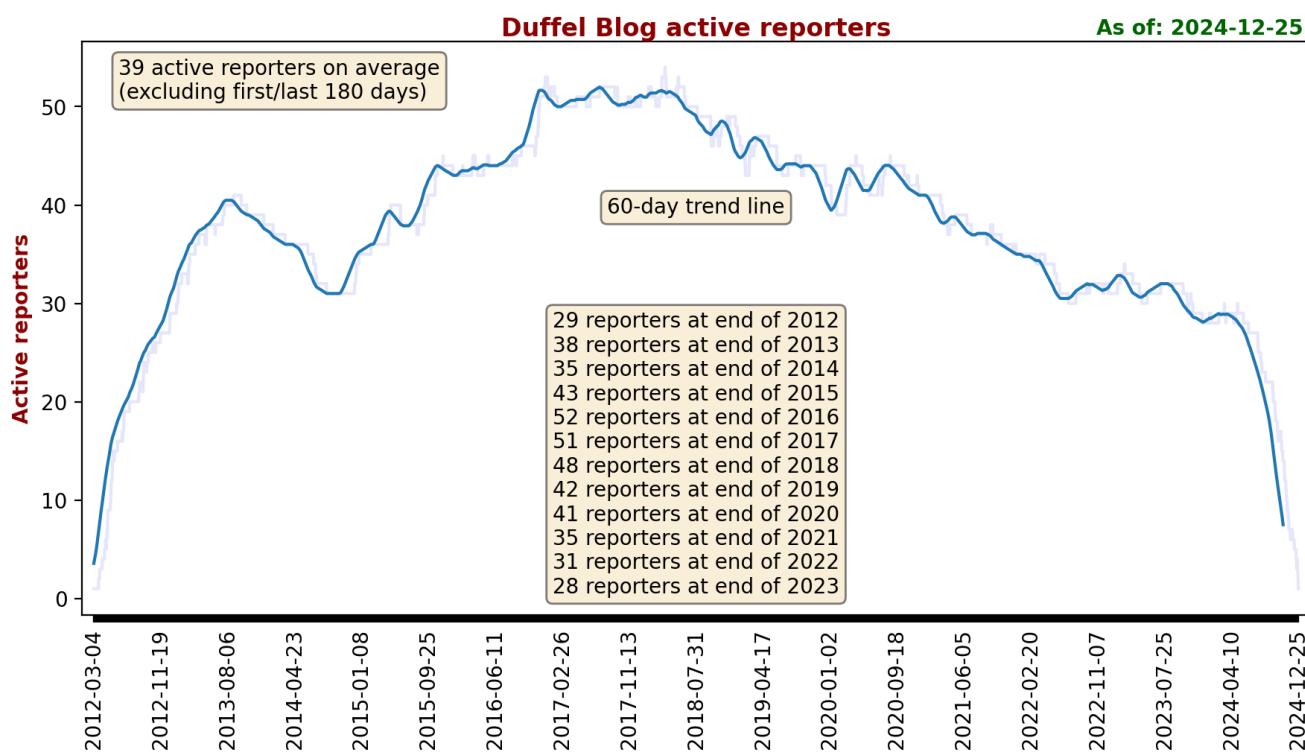

In August 2021 the staff chose 0800ET for Saturdays, and all time hacks going forward suggest we can chalk up rare anomalies to simple human forgetfulness. In May 2023, Duffel Blog standardized on 0500ET for weekday stories, and in June 2024, they standardized on 0800ET for all stories.

Active reporters trend

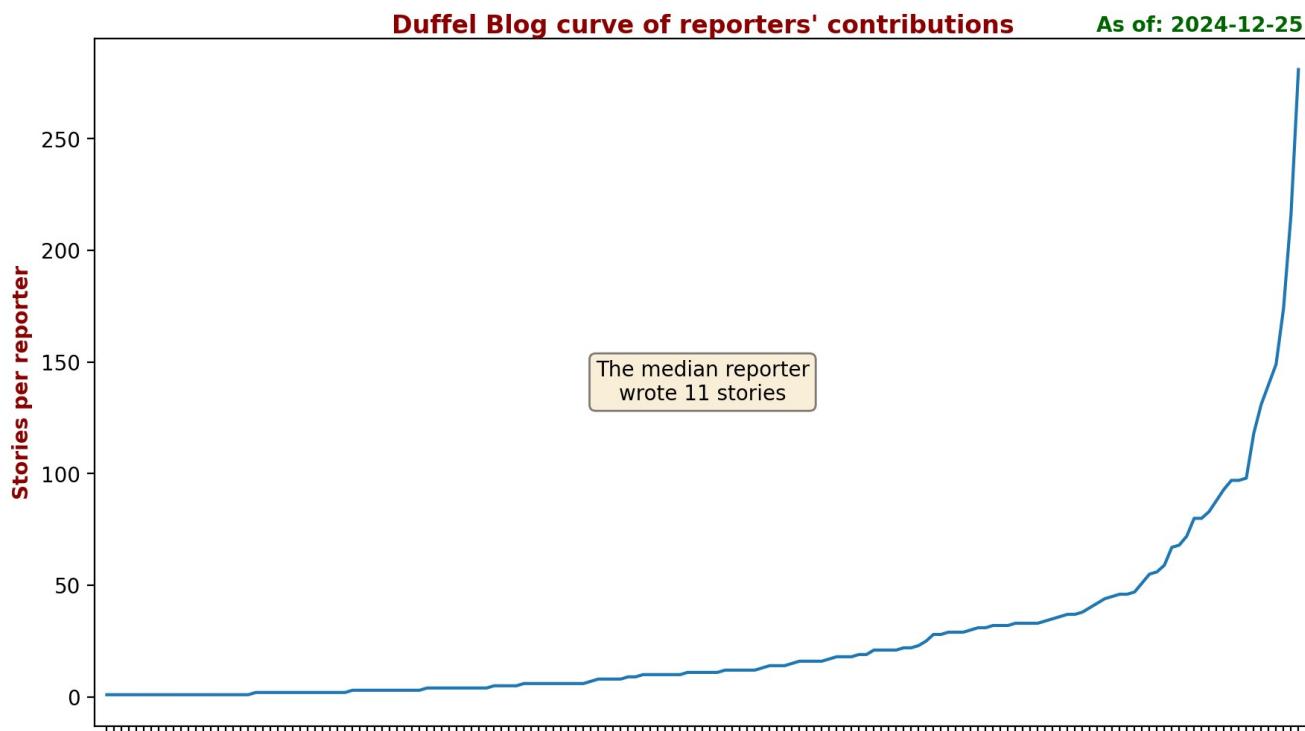

A reporter is "active" on this chart from the first day they publish 'til the last day they publish. Some reporters may simply be dormant — especially when you consider the downward slope at the chart's far end. We must expect these "EOY" totals will not match future charts if a [long-]dormant reporter publishes again.

Consult the "Byline seniority board" for exact tallies on every Duffel Blog reporter.

Reporters' contributions as a curve

The "Byline leader board" tallies each reporter's published stories, complete with annual breakdowns.

Reporters debut timeline

An overall timeline chart failed to provide a good visual representation of the data, but you can click here to see the 468-day gap between new reporters from 30 Aug 13 to 12 Dec 14. You can also view annual charts for 2012, 2013, 2014, 2015, 2016, 2017, 2018, 2019, 2020, 2021, 2022, 2023, and 2024 if you're curious.

Word Occurrence In Headlines

Excluding words like "a", "an", "the"...

A word must appear in a headline at least 3 times to appear in this list. Similar words count separately, e.g. "Afghan" vs. "Afghans." The shortest word in a headline is "VA" and the longest word is "environmentally-friendly," which is grammatically incorrect and the editor should feel ashamed for using a dash after "ly."

Thunder Chicken

Thunder Chicken is currently inside the Weapons Engagement Zone, relying on individual discipline and fieldcraft to avoid discovery while waiting to destroy enemy shipping with knives. He likes puppies, long walks amongst flowers, and conducting sea denial in designated areas in support of the naval campaign with available organic means, as well as naval and joint kill webs, helping to bring all-domain effects to bear when needed. He would have totally pledged the best fraternity on campus but the wars got in the way.
